SOTHEBY'S INTERNATIONAL REALTY genuinely appreciates having the opportunity to market your property for sale. However, as real estate agents, potential buyers and other persons will have access to your property when it is being shown, you should take precautions to ensure that your personal property is not damaged, lost or stolen.

As SOTHEBY' INTERNATIONAL REALTY cannot be responsible for your personal property, one of the measures you may want to consider to protect your property is placing your jewelry and valuable personal effects in a safe deposit box. If it is your preference to keep your property on the premises, you may want to keep it under lock and key so that it is not subject to access by anyone but you. Prescription medicines should be secured as well.

If you have moved or are going to move from the property prior to its sale, and the property will be vacant, you should check with your insurance company whether your homeowners' policy or other insurance you may have will provide coverage to non-occupied property. If not, you should inquire whether a special policy is available which will provide protection. If you live in a gated community, please check on the community's policies relating to gate access and the sale of your property and work with your agent to maintain gate code security.

The above matters are brought to your attention as part of SOTHEBY' INTERNATIONAL REALTY'S marketing program.
